

I serve in the military.
Next, I want to provide the medical care that Veterans need and deserve.

Transition your military training to a civilian career at VA.

Going through your transition program is all about re-integrating into the civilian world and finding a job that applies the training and experience you've gained. VA is creating a pipeline specifically for separating health care professionals. So transferring the health care training and experience you got in uniform to a career as a civilian cannot be made any easier than by joining Veterans Health Administration (VHA)

A career with VHA means you can:

- Continue in your field: physician, nurse, physical therapy, physician assistant, psychologist, medical technologist, occupational therapist, diagnostic radiologic technologist, pharmacist, and more
- Consider opportunities in support and administrative (non-health care) roles
- Work at any of VHA's advanced facilities in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico
- Utilize your knowledge, skills, and abilities gained from serving in uniform
- Work with a familiar patient population and continue to provide care for those who have served
- Reduce financial stress knowing a job is ready for after separation
- Enjoy an extensive bundle of VA benefits that are added to your military benefits

You have a deep understanding of military life that is unmatched by civilian professionals. Such shared experience—with both your fellow Veteran colleagues and our patient population—will allow you to excel both personally and professionally at VHA.

Join us in helping those who have helped our country.

Now, more than ever, you should consider VHA. Apply today at VAcareers.va.gov and continue to serve as, and with, our Nation's Veterans.

VA

U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs
Veterans Health Administration

VAcareers.va.gov